POETRY MONTH

"Why does poetry need a month of its own? Isn't it enough that we have to study it in English class?" Poetry might not be everyone's bag but those who like it, like it a lot. Even if you weren't a big fan of poetry in school, you might stumble across a great poem that you really connect with. The next time you are in the Concordia library, you might notice one posted nearby while you're waiting for a web page to load or studying for a final exam. Maybe the words will bring you a much needed laugh. Don't believe me? Poetry can definitely be funny. Grab a book by Shel Silverstein or Jack Prelutsky and see for vourself.

A lot of poets were rebels and rule breakers, refusing to conform to traditional forms of writing. The list of people who used poetry to defy expectations and express taboo points of view is endless. Walt Whitman. e.e. cummings. Mava Angelou. Allen Ginsberg are just a few examples.

Are Shakespeare's sonnets a little too old fashioned for your taste? Take a look at something more modern. Instead of cracking open a dusty old book, find some fresh words on the Internet. A great place to start is www.poets.org - the homepage of the Academy of American Poets. Listen to poets read their work aloud, watch videos online, download the Poem Flow app for your iphone, and sign up to receive a poem a day in your email. Reading a random poem is a good way to spark your own creativity and think about the world in a new way. If you're already feeling inspired, play with magnetic poetry online at www.magneticpoetry.com/play.html

For more information about Poetry Month visit the League of Canadian Poets website at www.poets.ca. Find out about local events, connect with authors, and explore how to get your own poetry published. Whether you produce poems or just enjoy reading them, spend a few minutes in April appreciating whatever poetry comes your way.

POETRY BOOK REVIEWS

With the end of term coming up fast, it's tough to find any free time. So many papers & projects, exams & evaluations; so much to read! It may not be the time to pick up a novel but how about grabbing a book of poetry from the library's April book display. Here are a few of my favorites:

Children of the Outer Dark: The Poetry of Christopher Dewdney – describes his overall themes as science, madness, and elegance.

morning in the burned house by Margaret Atwood includes poems that explore the death of a parent, as well as Atwood's other inspirations of myth and history.

Meade – The wry and sly Ms. Parker has an opinion about everything and expresses it in short teasing rhymes that poke fun at her subjects.

COOL WEB STUFF

Toetry Month! When inspiration strikes what you need is a rhyming dictionary. WriteExpress www.writeexpress.com/online2.html has a drop-down menu to choose end, last syllable, double, beginning and beginning syllable rhymes. At RhymeZone www.rhymezone.com/r/rhyme.cgi you can choose rhymes, similar sounding words, etc. and you have the option to include phrases in your results. At Rhymes.net www.rhymes.net you can also translate your word. Go to B-Rhymes www.b-rhymes.com if you want a near-rhyme (when close is good enough!).

🐣 Want to read a free poem every day during Poetry Month? Sign up at Knopf Doubleday Publishing http://poem-a-day.knopfdoubleday.com. If you sign up for the poem-a-day at DailyLit www.dailylit.com/books/poem-a-day-collection you can receive the poem by email or RSS, decide what time you get the message and whether you want daily, weekdays or Monday/Wednesday/Friday delivery. The Wordle graphic (shown above) was created using the poem-a-day selection from April 12, 2009.

🗥 Mythbusting - no I'm not talking about the guys on Discovery Channel. You know those emails that show up in your mailbox that seem too absurd, wacky or out there? Sometimes these urban legends involve missing children, terrorism or computer viruses. Some of them are outright scams trying to get you to send money. You don't want to respond to or forward an email with false information so it's important to verify the facts. The one I use is Snopes www.snopes.com. Other mythbusting websites are out there. There's an Urban Legends section on About.com http://urbanlegends.about.com. Truth or Fiction www.truthorfiction.com and Fact Check www.factcheck.org are two others. Whatever you do, don't get taken in!

🐣 Sushi Cat! http://armorgames.com/play/5379/sushi-cat. This is a cute game to while away a few minutes - or more! It can be quite addictive helping this kitty get his sushi.

Any feedback or suggestions would be mutch [sic] appreciated. Contact me at 479-9335 or jan.mutch@concordia.ab.ca.
